A list of few commonly noticed key components of writing annotated bibliography is stated as follows.

- Topic of the bibliography and detailed bibliography stated. This might be in any format depending upon the subject. The topic can be topic of the source, name of website, topic of research paper, name of book etc. Whereas the detailed bibliography is the detailed information of the source specified. This is the name of author, topic, year of publication, DOI in case of research paper, edition of the book, number of pages, website type etc. The most essential requirement is the detailed bibliography information according to the format style.
- A brief introduction of the topic and author of the source and also the central purpose of the source. This can be details of any examination conducted or analysis of a previously conducted work. In the case of a book, it could be related to the main purpose of writing the book and different concepts which are covered in the book. The introduction gives a highlight of the source from where the reader can have a rough idea of the content included in the source.
- Main body of the descriptive summary. Depending upon the type of research the body paragraphs of the summary are elaborated. If the annotated bibliography is conducted to be used in a thesis of lengthy research then the main body is very descriptive and in detail. Whereas if the annotated bibliography is part of a short work then the summary of the main body is short. The body includes only the information which belongs to the work done in the source. This could be the theory or argument on which the source is based.
- Concluding all the main points without any additional information. Non-information included in the conclusion should be new. The points need to be summed up and only should overview should be given. In the conclusion section the purpose of conducting the research, its results with the support that was discussed in the body paragraph should be discussed.
- Relevancy of the sources used. Writers prefer writing annotated bibliography of more than 3 sources. This is because through this the research could be more descriptive. Moreover, through this strategy writers have more information based on which they could complete their work. It should be made sure that the sources are relevant to each other. The sources need to have a connection with each other and thus should be related.
- The annotated bibliography should be presentable. Although this is used only by the writer it should follow a proper format. The topic, detailed bibliography, summary of sources should be stated in an order. They should be in a proper flow so it is easily understandable.

These key elements assist in documenting a clear and detailed annotated bibliography which can be later on used in any work. A good essay writing service will present the annotated bibliography in a flow. They will avoid mixing up the concepts and the data of the sources. These key elements are followed by the majority of the writers as it's a common way to write annotated bibliographies. The use of annotated bibliography is common and thus it is used in the majority of the papers.

Lastly following are points that should be avoided while documenting annotated bibliography:

- The summary of the sources should not be compared. Each summary should base on the data gathered from the source.
- The information included should not base on only the abstract. It should cover the results, examination, relevant information from the source, and other content from the research.
- The summaries should have zero plagiarism. Annotated bibliographies should not be copied and thus should be either rephrased or explained.
- The writer should not stick to one section of the source. This is because through this the summary will not cover all the major points of the source.
- Avoid listing points from the research which are less related to the main content or central research. This could be an early history of the author or information related to the publication.
